V. ADDITIONAL REMARKS

AUTHORIZATION FOR RELEASE OF INFORMATION

The National Court Interpreter Database (NCID) was established in 1999 by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. It contains the local rosters of district courts from across the United States, and is accessed through the Infoweb, the federal judiciary's internal computer network. It cannot be accessed by the general public. This court's local roster of contract interpreters can be accessed by the general public on the court's Internet page www.cacd.uscourts.gov. The information posted on the Internet page will consist of your name, contact numbers, e-mail address, language(s), certification, registration, and/or accreditation, and whether you are willing to travel.

I do not want my information entered into the: ☐ NCID ☐ Court's Internet page.
